

Click For Forecast

Tuesday September 20, 2005 Edition

In the past 30 days

Search archives

Go Shoppin

SECTIONS

- Home
- News
- Sports
- OpinionFeatures
- Obituaries
- •Area Happenings
- Movies
- Katrina Help
- Coupons
- •AM Stadium
- Archives

PHOTOS

- Photo Gallery
- Find Past Photos

WEBLOGS

- Snaps
- •Am Photogs
- Lizany
- Clay's Daze
- KB
- Figg Alley

THINGS TO DO

- Fairs & Festivals
- •Kentucky Crossword

LINKS

Local Web Sites

CONTACT US

PRINTER FRIENDLY ⊜

EMAIL TO A FRIEND

Terrapin Hill Fall Festival features music, kids' activities, ag education

Tuesday September 20, 2005

An intimate yet world-class music, art and camping festival cradled amongst the scenic rolling hills of central Kentucky opens Friday.

The Terrapin Hill Fall Festival is unique. It is not just another concert, but a three-day agritourism event held annually on a 350-acre, working organic farm and education center. Two hand-crafted cedar stages and an open-air pavilion are connected by wooded trails, creating a singular atmosphere and making it one of the most accessible festival venues in the country.

Boasting a positively-charged, boldly-varied spectrum of music, art, education and community awareness, attendees of the Terrapin Hill Fall Festival can enjoy a weekend full of distilled creativity, sensory awareness and progressive knowledge. Featured will be 35 bands covering a wide array of styles ranging

- Staff Directory
- •Submit Letter To Editor
- •E-mail Online Editor

CLASSIFIEDS

- View Classifieds
- Help Wanted
- Auto
- Submit Classified

BRASS BAND

- Great American
  Brass Band Festival
- •Purchase Advocate Brass Band CDs

ORAL HISTORY

 Oral History of Boyle County and Danville

OPEN RECORDS

•2005 Kentucky Open Records Project

AD SERVICES

Send Us Your Ad

OUR PAPER

- Subscribe
- Report Delivery
  Problem
- Rack Locations

OUR HISTORY BOOK

 Buy "Looking Back: A Pictorial History of Boyle County" from high-power funk to earthy folk, authentic bluegrass to skillfully improvised jazz, and all manner of rock and rolls.

Also featured this season will be an all-local, multi-media art show, grass-roots activism, interpretive dance, various workshops, agricultural-education sessions, healing arts therapists and workshops, and a kids' village full of activities. Also part of the weeknd festival is catered, locally-produced food.

What began more than a decade ago as small concerts has evolved naturally into the region's only event of its kind, peacefully converging several thousand friendly people from all corners of the country to listen, look, think and grow each year.

This year's festival schedule includes: Railroad Earth, The Code Talkers, Garaj Mahal, Donna the Buffalo, Barefoot Manner, The Duhks, The Bridge, Cornmeal, Madahoochi, Steep Canyon Rangers, Groovatron, Old Union, Peace in the Jones, Bockman, Big Leg Emma, Dubconscious, David Gans, Born Cross-Eyed, Myron Koch's Catastrophic Symphony, Bloom Street, Watty Peytona Bluegrass Collective, King Rhino, Kentucky Fried Pickin', Barnhouse Effect, Stonewheel, Blind Corn Liquor Pickers, What Happened When, New Kentucky String Ticklers, Sativa Gumbo, Papaw's Dawg, Namaste, Percival Potts, Sexual Disaster Quartet, Pulitzer-nominated writer Ron Whithead with Sarah Elizabeth Whitehead, Zoe Speaks, kids' programs, healing arts, percussion workshops, Rakadu Gypsy Dancers, artwork in various mediums by the Louisville Sculpture Society's David Norris and Aaron Raymer, artworks by John Lackey, Whitney Petree, Alisha Eli, and glass-blowing exhibitions by Jeremiah Hunt and other Louisville Glassworks artists.

This family-owned farm not only provides its region with a high-quality, nationally-recognized crop of annual music events, but it also yields the finest-quality organic produce, plants, hay and pastured poultry on the market. In spring 2005, the farm was one of only eight in the state to receive a "Competitive Agri-tourism Award" from the Kentucky Agricultural Development Board. With this grant, development of an education center is well under way, which provides the public a rare opportunity to observe a working, sustainable farm while attending educational and recreational events.

Increase the exposure of your premium property through this featured listing page. $100 per week or $300 per month -4 properties plus photo of agent

Ads must be prepaid. Copy and photo can change each week not to exceed four properties per ad.

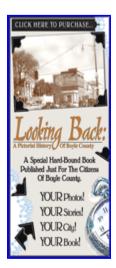

Ask about our new "Featured Listings" page that will allow you to showcase your exclusive property while increasing exposure to surrounding counties

CALL YOUR AD REPTODAY! 859-236-2551 or 800-428-0409

330 S. Fourth Street • P.O. Box 149 Danville, KY 40423-0149

ads@amnews.com

The center focuses on teaching the benefits of local food systems while providing an outlet for local farm products, which, by the way, will comprise most of the food for all the farm's events. The Terrapin Hill Fall Festival blends three of the land's most impactual uses - producing and promoting healthy food, showcasing top-quality music, and developing community awareness.

This is a rain or shine event. No refunds are offered. Gates open at noon Sept. 23 and close at 5 p.m. Sept. 25.

Parking is $5 per car, on-site camping is free, and kids 12 and under are free with an adult's paid admission. Tickets are $60 in advance - on the Web or at outlets - $75 at the gate. No dogs allowed.

For more information, go to www.TerrapinFestival.com or call (859) 621-2479.

Copyright The Advocate-Messenger 2005

